Tips for ordering plants

Plan what you want/need, considering markets, ripening dates, existing plantings, etc.

Do your research on variety characteristics, best plant type (plugs, roots, bare root, etc.) for your needs and situation, regional recommendations and experiences.

Order early to assure availability of the varieties and plant types you want.

Inspect plants on arrival to see if they are healthy looking and up to the standard grade.

Contact the nursery if you have questions or see problems.

New This Year

Several new cultivars make their debut on this year's Raspberry & Blackberry Nursery list. They are shown below. Please note that berry sizes in the photos are not comparable.

Caddo – An early ripening, thornless blackberry developed by Dr. John Clark at the University of Arkansas. It is being sold by AgriStarts, Indiana Berry & Plant Co., North American Plants, and Nourse Farms. Photo, University of Arkansas. More information at www.uaex.edu/media-resources/news/january2019/0125\_Caddo\_blackberry\_released.aspx

Mapema – An early-fruiting primocane red raspberry from the Advanced Berry Breeding (ABB) program in the Netherlands. It is available in very limited supply from Nourse Farms. Photo, ABB. More information at www.abbreeding.nl/varieties/mapema/?lang=en

Cascade Premier – A red raspberry from Dr. Pat Moore at Washington State University, bred for easy machine harvest. It is available from Northwest Plant Co. Photo, WSU. More information at <https://news.wsu.edu/2019/07/30/wsu-debuts-flavorful-easy-harvest-new-raspberry-cascade-premier/>
